

The Credit Card Crusade

Workshop for Students

Gary A. McAbee

The Credit Card Crusade for Students is a workshop based on the Credit Card Crusade seminar for adults. It is very important for students to know the positive effects of good credit management and the disastrous effects of bad credit management before they enter the world of credit usage. Unfortunately, many parents do not know about using credit wisely and this can lead to a continuous cycle of debt.

This workshop incorporates many aspects of learning including vocabulary, problem solving, and mathematics. Part one of this workshop presents a framework so that a student has a basic understanding of how credit works. Part two provides students with real-world examples such as how interest rates are calculated. Part three concludes with the long-term benefits of effective credit management that must start at an early age.

After the presentation, students will be more educated about credit cards and credit usage than many adults. They will also be able to teach others about credit and make good decisions about using their credit in the future.

The Credit Card Crusade workshop teaches students how to...

- Establish and maintain their credit
- Understand the credit scoring system
- Learn how credit cards work
- Apply basic financial strategies to their daily routines

The Credit Card Crusade workshop is based on the concept of applying basic financial education...

Our students are under attack! Did you know the following facts:

College bookstores put credit card applications inside bags during your purchase; they are paid by some of the credit card companies for this "service".

Credit card companies want impressionable students to get credit cards before they learn how to use their credit wisely.

Commercials and print media target young consumers, who see instant gratification as a way to get things that they want immediately.
